

I would like to express my dissatisfaction with the current "rules" imposed on Direct TV subscribers. In my area I'm unable to receive "off-air" HDTV signals from my local network affiliates. Additionally, these same local network affiliates have the ability to block Direct TV from providing them to me through my satellite subscription. How is that fair? I know this all comes down to advertising dollars, but at some point customer satisfaction and access to the market need to be addressed. I don't believe the Seattle network affiliates should have the right to block my ability to receive HDTV through Direct TV if they are unable to provide.
